Merry-Go-Round Churchill Lasts Just Like The Famed Cat Having Nine Lives

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON-Things You May Not Know About Winston Churchill: After Winnie suffered a stroke last year, he wiggled his toes desperately and persistently every morning to try to bring back his circulation: "I'm going to fool Eden yet," he fumed. . . . Eden is slated to become prime minister if Churchill dies. . . . Two years ago Churchill confided to a friend that he wished he had passed on the way Roosevelt did during the peak of the war. He said he felt lonely. . . . But last year the 79-year-old bulldog pulled himself back to life by sheer Tempestuous Life-Churchill has come closer to death more times than any other British statesman. In the Malakand campaign near the Afghanistan border he was almost killed by a Pathan tribesman. In the Boer War he was captured when an armored train was wrecked. The Boer who captured him turned out to be Louis Botha, who later became first prime minister of the Transvaal. . . . Arriving by boat in India he fell off the dock and saved himself by grabbing a mooring rope. . . . In World War I he was serving as a lieutenant colonel and left his underground trench to meet a general. The general never kept the appointment. When Churchill got back to his trench it had been blown to smithereens. . . . When 18, while being chased by his brother and cousin in a game at Lady Winbourne's home, Churchill jumped from a bridge to the tops of some young pine trees below. The drop was 30 feet, and he ended up in bed for three months. . . . In New York City forty years later, Churchill stepped off the curb and was hit by a taxi driven by Mario Constasino. Quite badly injured, he exonerated the driver, and managed to fill all but ten of 45 lecture engagements.

Impossible Youth - In school at Harrow, Churchill, according to biographer John Coulter, was "mentally unawake except when up to mischief." . . . Once he threw Charles Amery into the Harrow pool. Later Amery became his biographer and served in Churchill's World War II cabinet. . . . Only one man came to hear Churchill's first speech. It was scheduled to defend the "Entertainment Protection League" and attack those who wanted to ban music halls. When only one man came to hear him, Churchill hocked the watch given him by his father and went out on the town. . . . Churchill's father was Lord Henry Spencer Churchill. His mother was Jennie Jerome of Rochester, N. Y. . . . When told by Field Marshal Slim that the army would adopt a "bastard rifle-half American, half British," Churchili replied with solemn gravity: "My dera Marshal, aren't you being a trifle careless with your words? Have you forgotten that I too am half American, half British?"

Four Wars-Churchill studied not at Oxford or Cambridge, but at the British West Point, Sandhurst. He had a hard time getting in, didn't make it until the third try. But he graduated eighth in his class. . . . Within five years after graduation, Churchill managed to get into four wars. . . . He was an observer for the British army in the Spanish-American War in Cuba; went to the Malakand as a newspaperman-since the British army wouldn't take him as an officer; secretary of war during World War I and was responsible for the tragic decision to attack at Gallipoli in the Dardanelles. It brought one of the worst British defeats in history; though if the British had remained a few more days the Turks would have surrendered. . . . Reaction against Churchill was so bitter after Gallipoli that he resigned from the cabinet and joined his old regiment in France.

Churchill's Decisions - Winnie and FDR charted some of the most important strategy in the last war, and at times American generals and admirals resented it. . . . When visiting in the White House, Churchill stayed up until 3 a.m. every night talking to Harry Hopkins. Worn out, FDR always retired earlier. U.S. military men disliked these visits, felt Churchill put his views across late, when they had departed and he was left alone with Hopkins. . . . Winnie wore a crimson and gold kimono, loose bedroom slippers, used to flap down the White House hall to FDR's room. He got up just before noon, drank champagne at lunch, slept in the afternoon, and polished off a bottle of brandy during the evening. . . . Mrs. Roosevelt was never too happy about Winnie's visits, usually left town when he Churchill's War Politics - Winnie was dead opposed to the second front across the English Channel. That was one reason Stalin hated him. He wanted to wear the Germans out in Italy and the Balkans, which he called the soft underbelly of the Axis. U.S. generals claimed the belly was anything but soft. . . . When General Al Wedemeyer, chief of U.S. war plans, brusquely opposed Churchill's ideas on a Mediterranean war, Winston arranged to have Wedemeyer transferred to China. . . . It was Winnie who helped pick Gen. Charles de Gaulle and made him the exiled leader of the Free French, a decision he's sometimes regretted. . . . Another dubious decision was his instruction to General Skobie to "treat Athens as a conquered city." It was this instruction plus Skobie's shooting down of Greek civilians in the streets which turned the Greeks against the Allies and aided the Communists. . . . Another historic decision was Churchill's remark: "I was not made prime minister to liquidate the British Empire." He said this in connection with FDR's proposal to give Hong Kong back to China thereby strengthening Chiang Kai-shek. Chiang packed up and started to leave the Cairo conference after Churchill's turndown. . . . Historians may claim that failure to bolster Chiang, plus failure to push the China-Burma front was what really made China go Communist.

Churchill the Author--Churchill has written 33 books including one novel, "Savrola." . . . First book was "The Life of Lord Randolph Churchill," a best-seller which paid him $40,000. . . . His books on World War I brought him $100,000, while his recent books on World War II will net him over a million. . . . Challenged in Parliament while speaking for Ireland. Churchill once threw a book in the face of Ronald McNeill. It was not his book, but a copy of parliamentary rules and etiquette.

Power of Senate Committees Is Vested In Full Senate

By Bruce Biossat

You hear a great deal these days about the power of Senate committees, as if they were separate legal entities with authority conferred upon them both by statute and by the U.S. Consittution. But the fundamental fact about them tends to be overlooked.

Senate committees have no inherent power of their own. The authority they exercise is the power of the Senate itself.

The power to investigate, to subpoena witnesses, is the possession of the 96 senators together-as a legislative assembly. When this authority is used by a committee or a subcommittee, a group of from three to more than 20 individuals, it has merely been delegated. Since that is so, the power can therefore be withdrawn when the full Senate so wills.

This matter might have been put to test under circumstances that seemed to be taking shape not long ago in the Army-McCarthy hearings.

For a time it was not clear whether Senator McCarthy would choose to testify when the inquiry resumed after a week's lay-off. It looked doubtful that any effort would be made by the Mundt subcommittee to subpoena him, whatever the legalities of that problem. But indications were that the group would subpoena McCarthy's staff men, Roy Cohn and Francis Carr.

Thereupon the question arose whether Mc-Carthy, as chairman of the full Senate Committee on Government Operations, might seek to cancel any subpoenas issued for Cohn and Carr.

For the test to have been made, McCarthy of course would have required support of a committee majority in such a cancellation. His position as chairman does not give him authority independent of the committee.

But if he had decided on that course and had gained a majority support, it seems perfectly plain that the full Senate could have set aside his cancellation of subpoenas and ordered them issued as originally intended by the sub-com-

This might have been a case, in other words, of the Senate temporarily drawing back the power delegated to a committee in order to exercise it according to its own lights.

In some ways, Americans interested in greater senatorial responsibility were perhaps disappointed that some such test did not come off. Whatever the Senate's decision might have been. the mere need to make one would have served as a sharp reminder that the Senate is indeed the parent of its committees, and not simply their baby sitter.

Vitamin B-6 Is Important Factor In Infant Feeding

By Edwin P. Jordan, M. D.

A fascinating story of a medical mystery has just come to my attention. It started with the rather alarming experience of a physican who was called to see a number of infants about two months old who were afflicted with convulsive seizures

All of these infants were receiving the same commercial preparation of modified cow's milk rather than mother's milk. When they were given some other preparation the convulsions promptly ceased.

It soon became apparent that other physicians were seeing babies from about 6 weeks to 4 months old with similar convlusive seizures and that all of the infants had been fed on the same preparation. It was a startling and rather alarming situation.

The problem promptly came to the attention of the Division of Nutrition of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, and particularly to that of Dr. O. L. Kline in that division.

He quickly recognized the similarity of the convlusions in these small children to that which occurred in young rats who were fed a diet deficient in vitamin B-6 in exepriments which he and others had conducted some years before.

The next step was to see what effect the addition of vitamin B-6 to the diet of these infants would have. Soon after this step was decided on. an infant was admitted to the University Hospital, the State University of Iowa. This infant seemed a suitable candidate for this study.

The child was given a single injection of vitamin B-6. Although feeding was continued with the same batch of commercially modified cow's milk for several days, no further convlusions

A great many other studies on this curious situation have already been conducted. It was found, for example, that the vitamin B-6 content of the particular commercial preparation was a little less than half that in fresh human

The situation, of course, has been remedied and was no one's fault in the first place. But the whole experience has served to concentrate increased attention on the importance of vitamin B-6 in infant feeding in the prevention of convulsions

It has also emphasized the possible role of this vitamin in other conditions, and the importance of other vitamins as well.

One other point may be brought out from this remarkable event: Human milk for human infants remains the best food when possible, although one need have no unnecessary fears concerning modified cow's milk formulas because of this one unfortunate episode.

Moving Target

WASHINGTON - Public Housing Commissioner Charles E. Slusser told a southwestern conference of housing officials meeting at Santa Barbara, Calif., the other day, that it was nice to escape from Washington every once in a while.

"To remain in Washington for any length of time is a little nerve-wracking," he declared. "All troubles come to Washington, and anyone there all the time gets to feel like a sitting duck.

It's a relief to become, at least, a moving target. "Or to put in another way," Commissioner Slusser went on, "I can sympathize with the old lady who preferred to visit her neighbors.

" 'When I go visiting,' she said 'I can pick my friends. When I stay home, God only knows who might come a-calling."

Gets Prison Term For Killing Lover With Farewell Kiss

TOKYO P-Pretty Teruko Kamata was sentenced to four years in prison by Tokyo District Court today for killing her lover with a farewell kiss of death.

Teruko, 27, and Yukio Takayamaga, 33, were the lovers. But Yukio's passion cooled.

They registered for a farewell tryst last November at a Tokyo hotel known as the Canary Cage. Teruko told Yukio she would rather die than live without him. She took a gulp of soda water spiked with cyanide. Then she kissed her lover and forced the liquid down his throat.

Takayanagi swallowed and died.

Air-Conditioning of Operating Rooms Has Been Completed at the Bothwell Hospital

Bothwell Hospital has received three big improvements through the last year from May 1, 1953 to April 30, 1954, all making the hospital a more efficient unit and helping the convenience of all

Two operating rooms, as well as the delivery room, have been air conditioned, being operated off one central unit which was very recently installed.

The cost of this project was well over $3000, the hospital board paying all of the bill, with the exception of $750 which was given as a private donation. This unit was badly needed for summer use, as summer temperatures which prevail make operating room operations very uncomfortable for the patients as well as the doctors.

A new central supply room has been installed in the basement to replace the inadequate one which was there. Before, the room was incompetent to serve the needs of the whole hospital, and part of the sterilizing processes had to be carried on upon the second floor. Now there is a completely renovated room with new shelves, newly painted walls and drapes, sinks, overhead lights, and complete sterilizing equipment.

To speed the operation of interbuilding communication, a complete inter-com has been installed. This not only aids in the paging of doctors, but also helps speed medicines and nurses aids where needed, and makes general coordination throughout the hospital

Through the May 1, 1953 to April 30, 1954 year, there were 2,805 patients admitted to the hospital, with the total number of hospital days being 19,538. On an average, it is figured that each patient stayed 6.1 days. There were 1,163 operations performed, and a total of 612 births. Meals served total 91,521.

OBITUARIES Union Leaders DAILY RECORD Interpreting The News Columbia Beats

By J. M. ROBERTS JR. Associated Press News Analyst

The British people threw Winston Churchill out of office in 1945 for two reasons. They had fallen for the pie-in-the-sky promises of the Socialists, and they didn't think the great war leader was the man to guide them to peace. The Socialists messed up the country's economy and Churchill was called back, but the 1945 expression of doubt still rankled. As his age began to show more and more, he became obsessed with the idea that he could also gain a place in history as a

His efforts in this direction, which have brought him very close to the frame of mind which possessed British diplomats when they went to Munich in 1938, have also produced a very serious policy split with the United States.

So today's meeting in Washington was arranged to see if something could be done about it. But Anthony Eden, Churchill's companion on the trip and heir apparent, just about tore up the conferences before they began with his speech in Parliament Washington officials had expected Britain to agree, once the Geneva conferences prove ineffective, to get down to business on establishment of a Southeast Asian security pact. But Eden came up with a codicil. Such a security pact is all right, he said, but it should go hand in hand with an Asiatic Locarno in which Red China would join in guaranteeing an Indo-china settlement. The Locarno idea harks back to one of the long series of Churchill trial baloons.

Russia had picked up the Locarno idea, with variations, at the Berlin conference, and the Western powers had unanimously turned it down. One thing, of course, was that Russia demanded abandonment of plans for a unified European army.

Eden's speech was particularly offensive in Washington because he praised all the top Communist leaders at Geneva and omitted John Foster Dulles.

It was also badly timed, in that it came just when Premier Mendes-France, who is suspected in the United States of being willing to accept a cease fire in Indochina at any price, was conferring at Bern with Red Chinese Premier Chou in what Senator Knowland described as the preparation of a "Far Eastern

Eden gave indications of being prepared to go along with almost any settlement France might make.

The United States considers any sort of nonaggression and territorial guarantee pacts with the Communists as useless, and talk of them dangerous, since it emphasizes the lack of unity in the non-Communist front.

Eden did all Europe a disservice, too, by being so outspoken just at the time when a fight is developing in Congress over the new foreign aid program. The House Foreign Affairs Committee has just approved the President's proposals, in the main, in the knowledge that a heavy floor fight was probable. This prospect, already fired up by what many Americans consider France's failure to carry her share of the partnership, is now enhanced by increasing dissatisfaction with Britain.
